
Tres Manos Anejo

Posted by Mr Xtxa Anejo - 2007/11/03 02:03

As a new member/old user to join the site I thought I would start by letting you know about a nice find. While researching a Tequila tasting I hosted at a culinary school in Ojai California I found a very nice Anejo. Tres Manos comes in 1 liter and 1.75 liter sizes. There were only 3000 made this time around. I found it at the Beverage warehouse in Culver City near Hwy 405 and 90.

<http://www.beveragewarehouse.com/>. This place has a great number of Tequilas.

The Tres Manos is a nice 3 year Extra Anejo that has aged 3 years in charred French Oak, charred American Oak and used Oak Bourbon Barrels. It has a great nose with slight almond and vanilla notes, a smooth finish tops it off. The Oak is not too strong as to cover the agave fruit. I bought the 1 liter for the tasting and the group almost went through it so I went back and bought the 1.75 liter, still sealed.

See the Tasting message for the next tasting I will do in Ojai California, it is in Jan 08.

=====

Re:Tres Manos Anejo

Posted by restaurantpartsguy - 2007/11/10 15:03

I just looked up the Tres Manos Anejo it doesnt say extra anejo so I am not sure if it is correct but it is sold ay hi times for 66.99 for the 1 liter
I will pick it up in the next day or so
Brian
restaurantpartsguy@gmail.com

=====

Re:Tres Manos Anejo

Posted by SirGringo6 - 2008/05/19 04:12

That Tequila sounds like one I would like to really get my hands on. I wonder if they sell that in Michigan. It is a pleasure meeting you Mr Xtxa Anejo I bet you had a lot of experiences with Tequila at that Culinary School B)

=====

Re:Tres Manos Anejo

Posted by The Tequila Guy - 2008/05/23 22:16

The Extra Anejo classification was only approved by CRT within the last year or so. I have a lot of bottles of tequilas aged more than 3 years that doesn't have the classification. Just because it doesn't say Extra Anejo doesn't mean it's not the real deal.

The Tequila Guy

=====